

Activist Lab Impact Grants

Application Instructions

WHAT IS IT?

Micro-grants awarded for student projects designed to address a public health concern. The maximum award available is $2,000. Most awards will be in the range of $500-$1000, but requests for lesser amounts are welcome.

Connecting with a community partner is a critical component of this program. The lists of previous projects below include the community partner involved. You may wish to consider one of these or any other partner with whom you wish to collaborate. If you have questions about connecting with a community organization, please consult with Dean Andrade for more information.

WHO IS ELIGIBLE?

Any BUSPH student in good academic standing is eligible to apply. Other BU students interested in applying must work collaboratively with student(s) from SPH, who will serve as the primary applicant.

WHAT IS REQUIRED?

- (1) Projects must aim to address a particular public health need or concern. Projects should focus on making upstream, long-term public health change in a specific community.
- (2) Funded projects will address problems or concerns of people or communities locally, nationally, or internationally within a defined, practical scope. Projects must take place off the BU Campus, invite community partners to participate in an activity, or demonstrate specific relevance to a particular community – addressing community-identified challenges and opportunities (such as a project involving analysis of data regarding the community of interest).
- (3) Grant funds must be used to directly support the project, which may include: events, supplies, software, survey incentives, etc. Funds may not be used to support student or BU employee time on the project.
- (4) Projects must meet the needs of an organization or agency that works to address the needs of the population of interest. Examples: a project to address concerns of the homeless population in Boston must engage with the Boston Public Health Commission (BPHC) Homeless Services; a project to address substance use in Boston residents may engage with BPHC Recovery Services; etc. As part of the application, the community organization must provide a letter/statement to the Activist Lab supporting the specific project.
- (5) Projects must have a clear goal and present a deliverable at their completion. This may include an analysis of data, surveys or interviews to measure the success of an implemented program or a policy proposal.
